

LOGSTOR Academy presents
Instructor Ivan M. Ørnebjerg:

I am Dedicated to Making Course Participants Succeed

I am an old dog in the field, Ivan grins, when I ask him about his job as an instructor at the LOGSTOR Academy. Ivan worked in practice as a casing joint fitter for many years, before he became an instructor. He values that there is room for differences and a casual atmosphere at the Academy. We connect theory and practice, and that is what our customers appreciate. As an instructor, it is a pleasure to be in close contact with the course participants, and we often act as professional sparring partners on various projects and challenges in the field.

What does your Typical Workday Look Like?

My work consists of 75% instruction and 25% other tasks such as testing new products, tools and the like for R&D, give demos at customers', update installation instructions etc.

Why do you Like your Job as an Instructor?

It is always a pleasure to share one's experience, see the development the course participants undergo, and note the good results they achieve in practice.

What Qualities are Essential for your Work?

I am glad that I have a technical and pedagogical background that makes it easier to read the course participants. You need a good understanding of the people around you to convey a message.

What Makes a Good Day?

When I have achieved my teaching objectives and the course participants take a professional leap forward – as well as have "bad habits weeded out", Ivan says with a smile.

Why is LOGSTOR Academy a Good Workplace?

It is always nice to be in a department with good colleagues and good challenges. It is simply nice, when going to work in the morning you know: It's going to be a good day!
